PROTECTIVE FACTORS

Diverse family caregivers also reported experiencing some positive outcomes from the COVID-19 pandemic, demonstrating resilience and community interdependence:

- 55% Spent more time with family
- 48% Decreased commute times
- 44% Learned or used new technology

Although protective factors reveal resiliency and unity among diverse caregivers during the pandemic, they also emphasize the need for providers and formal institutions to more effectively provide much needed mental health and financial assistance to improve the quality of life of caregivers and ultimately their aging loved ones.

¹ Financial strain was more highly reported by American Indian and Alaska Native, Southeast Asian, and Asian American and Pacific Islander caregivers, compared to other groups.
Policy Priorities for a More Inclusive and Robust Support Infrastructure

The findings and recommendations in this report can inform and be interwoven into the following priority areas. These priorities support the development and execution of various actions that must be taken to better serve diverse communities.

These priorities align with the priorities outlined by the federal R.A.I.S.E. Family Caregiving Advisory Council housed under the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Administration for Community Living.

PRIORITY AREA 1: Increased awareness of LGBTQ+ caregivers, tribal caregivers, as well as caregivers from other diverse communities, including targeted education defining who is eligible for services.

PRIORITY AREA 2: Increased emphasis on integrating caregivers considered “family of choice,” immigrant caregivers, Limited English Proficient (LEP) caregivers, caregivers from the same tribe, and long distance caregivers into processes and systems from which they have been traditionally excluded.

PRIORITY AREA 3: Increased access to services and supports to assist family caregivers by including and investing into more resources to overcome language and cultural barriers and prioritize providing translated resources, services, and information.

PRIORITY AREA 4: Increased financial and workplace protections such as paid leave for caregivers with a specific focus on preparing to care for the future, financial planning and education.

PRIORITY AREA 5: Better and more consistent research and data collection facilitated through partnerships with CBOs who have established community trust with the aim of increased participation in research studies, such as caregiving surveys or focus groups.
